	"The Future of	Allied Health in	Primary Health (	Care – Where are	e we heading?"	– Panel Facilitate	d by Adam Spend	cer
	The Primary Health Care landscape continues to evolve. Reforms in the aged care and disability sectors are driving a shift to consumer-directed care in a more competitive market environment. At the same time Primary Health Networks are challenged with developing a strong integrated primary health care system that will improve patient outcomes and experiences, and deliver appropriate services where they are needed most.  Primary care services are usually delivered as a series of interventions that not always well connected, and often poorly linked with acute hospitals. Consumers of health services seek care from a variety of health care providers of differing backgrounds, working in a variety of settings and in different parts of the wider health system. The concept of the Health Care Home, while embryonic, has been heralded as a possible solution for people with complex and/or multiple chronic conditions.  In this environment Allied Health practitioners often function as individual discipline-specific providers and with a broad range of approaches to service delivery. They often have strong business relationships with referrers such as GPs and specialists, but do not have ready access to secure ICT platforms to enable information sharing with other care providers, vital for effective care coordination.								ated primary

	This session will provide a forum to discuss the actions that need to be taken to ensure that primary care Allied Health professionals are well placed to be part of new models of care as they emerge.
	<ul> <li>How can Allied Health Professionals make the most of the changing environment in primary care?</li> <li>Is there an agreed "best practice" framework for multidisciplinary care for priority populations? How is this framework promulgated?</li> <li>How will quality and safety of health care be monitored in primary care, and by whom?</li> </ul>
